ALUMNI DAY AT RICHMOND COLLEGE

In Richmond in 1783, a colossal enterprise launched by French gentlemen under the pretentious title of "Academy of the United States."

The corner-stone of this promising institution, said Mr. Patterson, "was laid and a building erected on the site where Monumental Church now stands."

The French Revolution and the complications which followed caused the scheme to be abandoned.

Mr. Patterson stated that in the opinion of leading educators of the country, Richmond College was situated at one of the strategic points in the history of the institution.

Mr. Patterson then introduced the Rev. R. H. Pitt, D. D., LL. D., of the class of 1879, the editor of the Religious Herald of this city.

Dr. Pitt's address on the early history and work of the college was listened to with close attention.

WOULD NOT BIND CITY TO BUY IT

The long and complicated ordinance granting a franchise to a burglar alarm company, which failed of enactment a year or more ago by reason of the Mayor's veto, was again passed by the Common Council after midnight Monday.

The proposition was called up unexpectedly on roll-call and produced a sensational result. In the course of which various important amendments were suggested.

None of these amendments was more important than that offered by Mr. Richards, a layman, releasing the city from any obligation to purchase the alarm system, or to pay for it.

Mr. Richards' amendment did not prevail in precise terms, it did in effect in an amendment suggested by Mr. Garber and offered by Mr. Davis. The amendment consisted in the substitution of the word "may" for "shall."

As offered section 7 of the franchise ordinance reads thus: "The privileges hereby granted shall continue for twenty years, unless sooner forfeited, and the cost of alarm, in the event of such valuation, shall be determined by arbitration." etc.

Mr. Richards feared that in the mandatory language used the granting or sale of a franchise might ultimately mean the unloading upon the city of an enterprise of doubtful value at exorbitant price. Whether he was right or not, the objections he offered to the text of the franchise had the effect of securing its passage by a large margin.

Mr. Richards also had the ordinance amended so as to increase the indemnifying bond for the protection of the city to $5,000 instead of $2,000.

CIVIC FLAG VOTE AROUSES COMMENT

Some Approve, but Most Vets. Disapprove Amendment of Ordinance.

NATIONAL SHIELD SUGGESTED

Mayor McCarthy Will Urge That This Be Substituted for Byrd Picture.

The action of the Common Council on Monday night in voting down the proposition of Mayor McCarthy to incorporate in the civic flag of Richmond a Norman shield bearing the Confederate colors and the Southern cross, was a surprise to the public yesterday, and especially to the Confederate veterans. Among them, however, there is some division of sentiment as to the appropriateness of perpetuating on a city flag the emblem that Richmond was the capital of the Confederacy. The majority of the council, however, endorse the attitude of the Mayor, while many of the younger citizens agree with the majority of the Council that it is best not to include the Confederate device and seal in the city flag.

What the Mayor Thinks.

Mayor McCarthy thinks that it would be better to put nothing on the reverse side of the flag than the picture of William Byrd, stating that this would mean nothing and have no significance nor appropriateness on a flag. In the event the Board of Aldermen show a disposition to concur in the Council's action, and to eliminate the Confederate emblem from the flag, he will suggest that the Byrd picture be substituted. The flag would then typify the fact that Richmond was the capital of the Confederacy, and represent the sovereignty of the State and of the United States.

Other Expressions.

Colonel W. Miles Cary, commander of Richmond Chapter of Confederate Veterans, when asked for a statement as to the Council's action, said:

"You can say for me I am very sorry it was done. I can see no good reason for the Council's action, and I am certainly not in sympathy with it."

Colonel Cary was just in the act of going out when asked as to the matter, and had not time to dictate a fuller statement. His son, Mr. Hansford Cary, not only protested against the proposition to eliminate the Confederate emblem from the flag, but also spoke in eloquent and earnest words against the Lynch proposition to substitute therefor the picture of Byrd. Speaking of the action of the Council in amending the ordinance and striking out the Confederate shield, Mayor McCarthy said:

"I regret it very much, and think it a misfortune that the Council failed to adopt the ordinance, because I think that the part of the flag which represents the Confederacy is the most honorable period in the city's history, and of those things which have made the city illustrious in all the world."

"I believe that within a few years all the Confederate cities will regret that this city will regret that the city did not seize the opportunity to adopt for all time this emblem, as distinguishing this city amongst all the cities of America."

Commander W. B. Freeman, of R. E. Lee Camp, Confederate Veterans, when asked for his opinion of the Council's action in amending the flag design so as to eliminate the Confederate emblem, dictated the following statement:

"My opinion is that the Council acted wisely. While all Confederates are proud of the record made by the city in the great struggle, and are not ashamed of the justice of our cause, it would, perhaps, be inappropriate to have the Confederate banner, precious as it is to us all, emblazoned upon a municipal flag, from the fact that, in some instances, perhaps, it would call forth comments from outsiders, who do not understand the feelings of our people."

"This must not be construed, however, to detract from the importance of keeping alive the memory of the great struggle, the late war, and in the important work to be done in gathering material and keeping alive the sentiments that will be necessary for the writing of a true history of the city. It is the duty of all of the people realize what an important work the ex-Confederates, the noble women and their sympathizers of the new generation are doing along this line."

The Board of Aldermen, at the meeting next Wednesday night, will take up the ordinance of concurrence in the Common Council's action, and it will then become known just what the design for the flag will be. The Mayor's alternative suggestion of replacing the Confederate shield with the seal of the city of arms, a similarly shaped shield, with the top section blue and the lower portion of alternate stripes of red and white, may be the ultimate solution of the differences of view as to the matter.

It is believed that the Council will not, and the proposition to place the Byrd picture on the flag apparently finds little favor.

CRUSADE AGAINST GAMBLING DENS

Chief Says He Knows of Number of Other Places and Is Going After Them.

Two cases in which gambling is charged were brought before Judge Crutchfield today morning. Charles G. Lewis, who at last night's session was fined $200 and given a day in the city, was one defendant. It is said that Lewis conducts a gambling place at 606 East Broad Street, by means of the case post-poned. A resident of Richmond is said to have been a witness to the case, and in request of a habeas corpus, he had the house raided. The prisoner was held.

The other case was that of T. B. Rollins, who is charged with keeping a pool joint, No. 802 East Cary Street. Although this place was raided last night, the case was postponed. Officers Ogilvie and Kuhn heard that there were in full swing again Monday and made a raid on the place. The case of Rollins is that he has been proven the establishment for a variety of gamblers, and that he has been fined $200 and given a day in the city.

Major Wornor is very much interested in the case, and states that he knows of a number of other places in the city where gambling is going on, and that he will make every effort to break them up.

Testing License Ordinances. Twenty or thirty business firms had their names called in the Police Court yesterday, charged with dereliction in obtaining licenses to continue business in the city. Among these, was the name of a Richmond bakery known as L. Broom & Company. It was claimed in the proceedings that this firm was operating a bread wagon on the streets of Manchester without privilege of license, and the court was disposed to inflict the customary $10 fine.

Judge D. C. Richardson, who appeared for the defendant company, requested the court to take the matter under advisement, which Mayor Maurice consented to do.

The case will come up for hearing Monday week.

Century Committee Meets. At a lengthy session of the Century Committee, held Monday night, it was determined to frame and adopt new regulations governing the future conduct of the affairs of the century.

It has been learned by members of the committee that the shortage in the accounts of W. M. Allen, the absconding superintendent of the cemetery, now aggregated upwards of $2,000.

To obviate a possible repetition of such difficulties, the committee has immediately drafted requiring that, before any grave be opened, a permit for same must be presented in the form of a receipt from the City Auditor for funds deposited with the treasurer.

Such regulations, it is said, will be immediately adopted by the committee as a necessary protection against future fraud.

Minor Matters of News. Judge and William Clayton left yesterday for the Jamestown Exposition.

Rev. J. F. Fox, of the First Presbyterian Church, and Rev. J. V. Gaddy, of Baldrick-Street Baptist Church, returned Monday from Norfolk, where they had been visiting the Jamestown Exposition.

It is reported in some quarters that T. P. Goode, Sheriff of Chesterfield County, will soon be nominated by his friends as a candidate for treasurer.

Mr. A. J. Carter, who recently left Manchester, together with a considerable indebtedness behind him, is said to be in difficulty in Cincinnati similar to those he left in Virginia.

Mr. Patterson then introduced the Rev. R. H. Pitt, D. D., LL. D., of the class of 1879, the editor of the Religious Herald of this city.

Dr. Pitt's address on the early history and work of the college was listened to with close attention.
